

A Rewarding Career — A Variety of Career Paths

The Master of Science degree in Forensic Psychology opens the door to the study of human psychology and the role it plays in criminal behavior, our legal system, and rehabilitation. You will learn the clinical, legal, and forensic analysis skills necessary to aid criminal investigations, litigation, or consultation. The degree is ideally suited for those interested in pursuing further study or work in a variety of social service agencies, institutions, police departments, or the courts.

The goal of the MS in Forensic Psychology is to graduate competent, ethical practitioners with the expertise to create relevant, accurate, and credible data and conclusions that inform legal arguments and judicial decision-making.

Monroe’s 42-credit Forensic Psychology master’s program is available on-site, online, and in a hybrid format.
